

Poems not only about love

Bookery II reading and book presentation

Poet Sasha Skenderija and Bosnian-to-English translators Wayles Browne and K. E. Bättig von Wittelsbach read poems from their new book:

Why the Dwarf Had To Be Shot

*"Sasha will sing you to sleep and wake you from your nightmares!"
(Jeremy Kamil)*

About the author:
Sasha Skenderija is the only Bosnian poet now active in Ithaca.

"The haunted and the sarcastic, the penetrating as well as lighthearted, about dodging bullets in the madness of war while continuing to think thoughts, make love with friends while talking, if not others, this little book of prose-poems squeezed my heart so bad that my soul began to weep, my mind chuckling away..." (Andrew Lass)

"Urgency, discursivity, painful vivisection and funny torsions, philosophy and LIFE, cynicism and need to express feelings that other will spit on, doesn't matter, in the end." (Radu Popa)
